For most online classifieds

- Online visitors interested in a listing
 - Typically call 9am -6pm
 - Experience missed calls
 - Some reluctant to call, like online
- Advertisers miss about 20-30% of the calls
- 10-15% of the emails are never opened
- Emails are not checked quickly, leading to delay in sales

Service Description

When sellers publish listings, the service is activated automatically* and they can start using it immediately.

Sellers can publish their availability by simply painting or using calendar helper. They can do it for a day, weeks or months.

*Auto activation requires JS or API based integration.

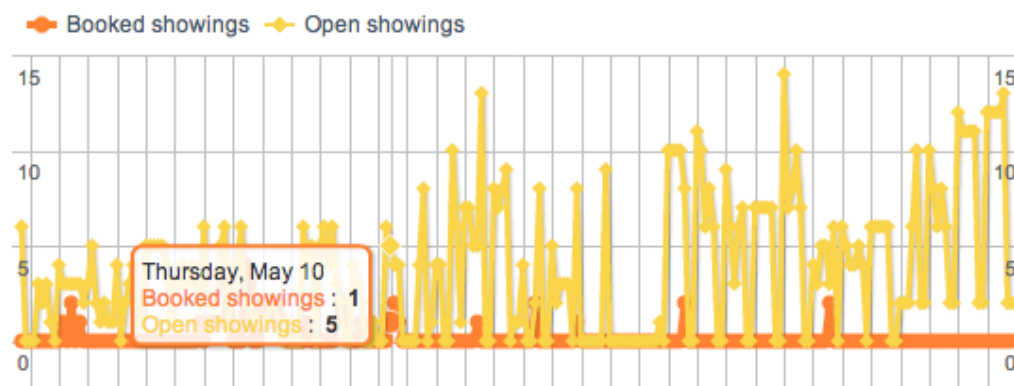

Advertisers also see a database of customers with names, phone numbers, emails and listings they have previously been interested.

Hakema Launches Appointment Booking Service, Integrated On Oikotie

By Olli Lindholm, February 28, 2012, Leave a Comment

Hakema just launched its new product that focuses on appointment bookings for real-estate sellers and buyers. It solves a time-consuming problem: when people are searching for apartments online, buyers need to make appointments with sellers. Currently, finding a suitable time using phone or email is time-consuming and inconvenient. Also, sellers' efforts are wasted if there are no visitors to open houses. Hakema brings these two parties together and also collects information on potential buyers and runs a proper analysis of visits and customer interest. With its launch, the Hakema service is now live on Oikotie, a large online classified site in Finland.

02 Slick auto-appointment product hopefully coming to U.S. shores

Posted by Andrew Kantor, Editor & Blogger

A Finnish company has a very cool classified-ad tool for Realtors®, and hopefully it will make it to the States.

The premise of Hakema (Finnish for "Reply") is simple: First, you tell the software when you're available for appointments. Then, when you place a classified (print, online, whatever), you include a link to Hakema, which allows visitors to book some time with you immediately. When someone does, it fills in that spot on your calendar with all the relevant information.

You don't have to worry about being interrupted at a bad time by someone who wants to make an appointment, and you know that you can't be double-booked for a time slot. Both you and your (potential) client will receive confirmations and reminders, and if the property is sold you'll both be alerted to that as well.

Unfortunately, Hakema isn't available in the U.S. yet. Classified providers (e.g., newspapers, craigslist, etc.) need to sign up to offer it. But you can still check out the site to get information... and maybe see when it makes it over here.
