

The European Job Board Summit

Europe's first Job Board Summit will take place on the 30th November, 2012 in London. The conference is being held in association with the International Association of Employment Web Sites (IAEWS).

With millions of job seekers across Europe using job boards every day to search for work, register a CV or sign up for a job alert, job boards remain the number one way to find a job. But the world is changing and becoming more challenging and that's why The European Job Board Summit 2012 has brought together industry experts from across Europe to share information, examine best practices and discuss the future issues which will shape the industry.

The event is being held at Dexter House, No.2 Royal Mint Court, Tower Hill, London, EC3N 4QN in the heart of city.

Keynote speakers will address topics such as:

- The Future of Work and how this and changes in Talent Management might impact on job boards.
- A European view of what job seekers expect today but potentially tomorrow from their job board.
- The power of data to shape our businesses with presentations from Broadbean and Innovantage.
- Future gazing - looking at Facebook, search and what else on the horizon might impact on a job board.
- The future of job board technology, from search to matching and much more. Lead by Marc Drees plus a panel of experts.
- Chris Bradshaw of AllTheTopBananas will discuss all things mobile.
- Building a "social job board" - tips and advice from Simon Lewis and Angelica Robinson.
- From the US, MD and founder of the IAEWS, Peter Weddle will present the results of his association's global benchmarking survey and give us an American perspective of emerging opportunities and trends in the industry.

As well as all of this, the event will include breakout sessions which the delegates will help shape and will be facilitated by industry experts. To round out the day, over a cold drink, there will be a panel Q&A with some of the "founders" of online recruitment such as Robbie Cowling, Keith Pott and Eric Petco taking questions from the audience.
